Regulators of financial institutions have been called upon to develop policy frameworks that will support businesses that are promoting climate change initiatives. This, according to stakeholders will help businesses access more funding to implement various policies in the sustainable development goals.

Speaking to JoyBusiness at the Ghana Stock Exchange "Ring the Bell for Climate Change", Executive Director for the UN Global Compact Network, Kweku Lacroix urged investors in the financial sector to pay attention to the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) initiatives.

According to the United Nations Global Compact Network, Ghana, investors in the financial sector can develop basic frameworks that can give easy access to funding for businesses promoting sustainability.

"Today's event is a testament to the transformative power of finance and collaboration. The Ghana Stock Exchange, alongside global counterparts, is stepping forward to address one of the most pressing challenges of our time: climate change".

The Deputy Managing Director for the Ghana Stock Exchange, Frank Berle in a keynote speech underscored the importance of the event in supporting Ghana's climate change agenda.

"The Ghana Stock Exchange is very much committed to supporting climate-friendly developments and this is what has inspired us in collaborating with the World Federation of Exchanges once again and joining other global exchanges to organize the 2nd Ring the Bell for Climate event, which is running alongside COP29 this year," he said.
