The city has a humid subtropical climate influenced by monsoon winds. Summers are hot and humid with thunderstorms while winters are short, cool and very foggy. Typhoons from the Pacific affect the city between June and October.

Taipei is connected by air to many major cities of the world. Flights operate to and fro from the Taiwan Taoyuan International Airport (previously known as Chiang Kai Shek airport). It is located 30 kms away from the city and you can travel by bus to the other corners of the city. In addition, the Songshan airport connects the city with several domestic destinations. Bus and High Speed Rail can easily be used to reach any domestic destination within the city.

The best time to visit Taipei is in the fall in November and December. The temperature is pleasant and the rainfall is pretty low at this time. This is why it is the most comfortable time to visit.

The society and culture of Taipei is a delightful blend of the old and the new. The traditional beliefs, religion and practices of Taiwan are very much present, but international trade and cultural exchange has helped Taipei to acquire a far more sophisticated veneer.
